

The Corpus of Contemporary American English (COCA)

2012 Jun Updated

The Corpus of Contemporary American English (COCA) is the largest freely-available corpus of English, and the only large and balanced corpus of American English. The corpus was created by Mark Davies of Brigham Young University, and it is used by tens of thousands of users every month (linguists, teachers, translators, and other researchers). COCA is also related to other large corpora that we have created.

The corpus contains more than 450 million words. . . [in 189,431 texts] and is equally divided among spoken, fiction, popular magazines, newspapers, and academic texts. It includes 20 million words each year from 1990-2012 and the corpus is also updated regularly (the most recent texts are from Summer 2012). [The most recent addition of texts (Apr 2011 - Jun 2012) was completed in June 2012.] Because of its design, it is perhaps the only corpus of English that is suitable for looking at current, ongoing changes in the language (see the 2011 article in Literary and Linguistic Computing).

For each year (and therefore overall, as well), the corpus is evenly divided between the five genres of spoken, fiction, popular magazines, newspapers, and academic journals. The texts come from a variety of sources:

- Spoken: (95 million words [95,385,672]) Transcripts of unscripted conversation from more than 150 different TV and radio programs (examples: All Things Considered (NPR), Newshour (PBS), Good Morning America (ABC), Today Show (NBC), 60 Minutes (CBS), Hannity and Colmes (Fox), Jerry Springer, etc). [See notes on the naturalness and authenticity of the language from these transcripts).
- Fiction: (90 million words [90,344,134]) Short stories and plays from literary magazines, children's magazines, popular magazines, first chapters of first edition books 1990-present, and movie scripts.
- Popular Magazines: (95 million words [95,564,706]) Nearly 100 different magazines, with a good mix (overall, and by year) between specific domains (news, health, home and gardening, women, financial, religion, sports, etc). A few examples are Time, Men's Health, Good Housekeeping, Cosmopolitan, Fortune, Christian Century, Sports Illustrated, etc.
- Newspapers: (92 million words [91,680,966]) Ten newspapers from across the US, including: USA Today, New York Times, Atlanta Journal Constitution, San Francisco Chronicle, etc. In most cases, there is a good mix between different sections of the newspaper, such as local news, opinion, sports, financial, etc.

- Academic Journals: (91 million words [91,044,778]) Nearly 100 different peer-reviewed journals. These were selected to cover the entire range of the Library of Congress classification system (e.g. a certain percentage from B (philosophy, psychology, religion), D (world history), K (education), T (technology), etc.), both overall and by number of words per year

COCA Compared with Other Corpora

The Corpus of Contemporary American English (COCA) offers a balance of availability, size, genres, and currency (how recent it is) that is not found in other corpora, including the American National Corpus (ANC), the British National Corpus (BNC), the Bank of English (BOE), or the Oxford English Corpus (OEC).

In addition, the architecture used for COCA (and the other corpora from corpus.byu.edu) is among the most powerful architectures available for online corpora -- at least as scalable and feature-rich as Corpus Workbench (including its incarnation in Sketch Engine and BNCweb), as well as other architectures like VISL and PIE (more information...).

The chart below provides a summary of the features of the different corpora, and detailed discussions can be found via the links at the top of each column.

Notes:

1. The OEC is generally available only to researchers at Oxford University Press, although access is occasionally given to selected researchers outside of the OUP.
2. In 2005 the corpus had 22 million words, and the current site still mentions 22 million words, but some people have claimed that new texts have been added since 2005. We'd appreciate details from anyone who knows about the status on this.

COCA Compared with BNC

Overall, the wordlists from the British National Corpus (list 1 / list 2) are quite good. However, because there are some important differences between COCA and the BNC in terms of size and how recent the corpora are, and so the BNC may not be as accurate for low-frequency words and for new words in the language. Note also that the wordlists from the BNC (list 1 / list 2) do not provide anything beyond the bare wordlist -- no collocates, no synonyms, etc -- and therefore no indication of the meaning and use of the words.

Overall, for the top 5,000 words there is about a 10% difference between the the COCA and the BNC wordlists (see explanation of methodology below), beyond spelling differences (favo(u)rite, program(me), categori[s/z]e, etc). Things get somewhat more problematic at lower levels, where the BNC lists diverge 30-35% from what is found in the COCA lists.

Some differences in the wordlists are related to culture, society, politics, or current events (e.g. Am Republican, congressional, baseball, Iraqi; Br Tory, parliamentary, Victorian), some are just different words for the "same" concept (e.g. store/shop, attorney/solicitor, apartment/flat, mom/mum), and some words in COCA (1990-2010) refer to things that are too new to have made it into the pre-1993 BNC (e.g. web, Internet, high-tech, online).

+American (COCA) / -British (BNC)

The following are just a sampling of the words that are much more common in COCA than in the BNC. In all cases, the word is at least twice as far down the list in the BNC wordlist as in COCA (e.g. #2000 in COCA, #5000 in BNC).

Verb: call, report, focus, guess, sign, step, figure, roll, fire, hire, file, oppose, wrap, interview, accomplish, testify, bake, track, evolve, violate, target, pitch, flip, ruin, hike, invade

Adjective: American, federal, tough, native, Iraqi, crazy, smart, Israeli, Mexican, congressional, elementary, online, gifted, athletic, ongoing, African-american, suburban, Hispanic, scary, high-tech, cute, nonprofit, immigrant, skeptical, aging, low-income, interstate

+British (BNC) / -American (COCA)

The British National Corpus (BNC) and the Corpus of Contemporary American English (COCA) complement each other nicely, since they are the only large, well-balanced corpora of English that are freely-available online. Here we will briefly compare the two corpora in terms of corpus size, genre coverage, and how up-to-date they are.

Corpus size

The Corpus of Contemporary American English (450 million words) is more than four times as large as the British National Corpus (100 million words). As a result, it often provides data for lower-frequency constructions that are not available from the BNC. In terms of concrete examples, let us focus here on just two types of phenomena -- collocates and syntax.

Collocates / semantics. The following table shows the number of different collocates that occur at least 3-5 times with the given node words. Notice that with a word like nibble, the word itself only occurs 4-5 times as often in COCA as the BNC (1194 to 244; to be expected from a corpus four times the size). But in terms of collocates, there are 14 times as many in COCA that occur 5 times or more as there are in the BNC. For low frequency words like these, there is often a real difference between a 100 million word corpus and a 450 million word corpus.

Word (PoS)	COCA freq	BNC freq	collocate PoS / span	COCA (click to see)	BNC (click to see)
click (noun)	3145	445	adj 2L / 0R	26 loud, audible, double, sharp	5 double, sharp, loud
nibble (verb)	1194	244	noun 0L / 3R	28 edges, grass, ear, lip	2 ear, bait
serenely (adv)	308	83	verb 4L / 4R	21 smile, float, gaze, glide	2 said, smiled
crumbled (adj)	446	27	noun 0L / 3R	31 cheese, bacon, bread, cornbread	0 ---

Syntax. Consider the following three examples.

- [like] for [p*] to [v*] (I'd really like for you to stay)
There are 5 tokens in the BNC, but 330 tokens in COCA. With the BNC there aren't enough examples to see if this is a feature of informal or formal English, but the data from COCA show that it is clearly a feature of spoken English. The data also shows that it is increasing slowly over time, when compared as a ratio to the construction [like -- him to V].
- Is it excel in V-ing, or excel at V-ing ? (she excels in/at playing the piano)
Granted, this is a very narrow issue, but it is precisely the thing that translators and non-native speakers are interested in. With the BNC there are 5 tokens with at and 6 with in -- probably not enough to say which is more common. In COCA, however, there are 122 with at and 42 with in. This is enough to begin to see which genres prefer one or the other, as well as which subordinate clause verbs occur with each. Such granularity is not possible with the BNC.
- [have] been being [vvn] (she had been being watched)
There are 2 tokens in the BNC (1 spoken, 1 fiction), and this is not enough data to see any possible genre variation. In COCA, on the other hand, there are 13 tokens (10 spoken, 2 fiction, 1 news). This is enough to show that this is a feature of spoken English, and the data also shows that it is increasing since 1990. (By the way, most native speakers of both dialects will cringe at sentences like this, but they are in the corpora.)

In summary, while 100 million words is often adequate for studying syntax, for some very low-frequency phenomena, there is a real difference between 100 million words (BNC) and 450 million words (COCA).

How up-to-date are the corpora?

COCA has 20 million words in each year since the early 1990s (for a total of more than 450 million words total since the early 1990s), and the most recent texts are from Summer 2012. The most recent texts in the BNC, on the other hand, are from the early 1990s -- more than fifteen years ago. This has important implications in terms of how the two corpora represent contemporary English.

Lexical. Perhaps the easiest comparison deals with words that have recently come into English, or which are used a lot more now than 15-20 years ago. The following lists show a few words (just a tiny sample of all such words) that are found less than half as often in the BNC than in COCA (per million words), and the words in italics are found less than 10% as often (often, there are no tokens in the BNC). Obviously, some are American words and wouldn't be in a corpus of British English. Many others, however, are words that are simply much more common in COCA, because it alone contains texts from the last 15 years.

Noun: website (COCA/BNC), blog (COCA/BNC), globalization/globalisation (COCA/BNC), SUV, RPG, Taliban, e-mail, anthrax, recount, adolescent, prep, tsunami, affiliation, Sunni, insurgent, insurgency, terrorism, coping, terrorist, cleric, yoga, homeland, genome, steroid, detainee, militant

Adjective: same-sex (COCA/BNC), Islamist (COCA/BNC), upscale (COCA/BNC), terrorist, faith-based, web-based, nonstick, dot-com, performance-enhancing, high-stakes, 21st-century, old-school, pandemic, iconic, insurgent, online, broadband, gated, wireless, clueless

Adverb: wirelessly (COCA/BNC), healthfully (COCA/BNC), multiculturally (COCA/BNC), preemptively, inferiorly, counterintuitively, online, forensically, intraoperatively, postoperatively, famously

Verb: mentor (COCA/BNC), morph (COCA/BNC), download (COCA/BNC), e-mail, makeover, prep, upload, workout, freak, transition, vaccinate, encrypt, reconnect, click, host, splurge, preheat, co-write, outsource, snack, partner

Although we have focused just on new "words" here, the same thing holds for other areas of language -- morphology (word formation), syntax (grammar), and semantics (word meaning, such as green = "environmentally friendly"), or discourse analysis (what we are saying about immigrants, or women, or the environment). Any changes that have occurred since the early 1990s will not show up in BNC, but should be modeled quite nicely with COCA.

Genre balance

The BNC is 10% spoken / 90% written, while in COCA the corpus is nearly evenly divided (20% in each genre) between spoken, fiction, popular magazines, newspaper, and academic.

GENRE	COCA (millions of words)	BNC (millions of words)
Spoken	95	10
Fiction	90	17
Popular magazines	95	16
Newspaper	91	11
Academic	91	16
Other		30

The BNC has a much wider range of spoken sub-genres, while COCA is composed of unscripted conversation on TV and radio shows (see notes on the naturalness of these conversations). Both corpora are very well balanced in terms of sub-genres for the written genres (e.g. Newspaper-Sports, or Academic-Medicine). In addition, because there is a diachronic aspect to COCA (coverage over time), in COCA the distribution of 20% in each of the five genres stays constant from year to year.

Summary

COCA and the BNC complement each other nicely, and they are only large, well-balanced corpora of English that are publicly-available. The BNC has better coverage of informal, everyday conversation, while COCA is much larger and more recent, which has important implications for the quantity and quality of the data overall.

Unless one is inherently interested in only British or American English, there is really no reason to not take advantage of both corpora. This is especially true when -- as with the interface at corpus.byu.edu -- both corpora can be used side-by-side, with the same interface. For most types of studies, academic publications and presentations that rely on just the BNC for data from Modern English will look increasingly outdated and insular as time goes on.
